There's both sides to this. Everyone has masks on so I doubt you'd dox anyone.

Yep, you'd have to be sure that each and every person that you captured in the photo was basically unidentifiable (to a reasonable degree) so as not to potentially eff up their lives owing to the crazed Left's cancel culture.

Granted it's a public venue, but not one like the rally where still imagery and video are expected and people prepare accordingly.

When an item of clothing, a hat with a pin, a backpack or whatever could lead to identification it's a no-go. Would you want someone snapping and uploading your image to a public internet server to later be doxxed because you were associating with pro-Trump travelers? Even if so, that's you, and not them. Particularly in this CCP Covid-19 economy, to lose a job over a rando photo would be a cruel punishment.

That said, personally I'd go in expecting the potential of being photographed and videoed revealing enough information for identification. But I would not do it to others without some consideration of the circumstances beforehand.
